American Sign Language Certificate

Overview

The American Sign Language (ASL) Certificate program will lead students to: a high degree of proficiency in ASL; an understanding of the structure of ASL as a visual/gestural language; and an understanding of important issues in deaf culture and education. This certificate program could conveniently accompany various undergraduate majors including, but not limited to, linguistics, communication science, and various undergraduate disciplines that serve as the basis for graduate degrees and certificates in the University of Pittsburgh's School of Education. The program draws on the academic strand resources of the Department

This certificate program requires course completion of 18 credits, not including the prerequisite courses. Students must successfully complete performance on skills and knowledge evaluations to declare this certificate.
